A GUIDE FOR MUNICIPAL COUNCIL MEMBERS AND REGIONAL DIRECTORS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

1.0 LOCAL GOVERNMENTS AND THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

Municipalities and regional districts are created by the Provincial government, but authority for the incorporation of local authorities is given specifically to the Provinces in the Constitution Act, 1867 (formerly the British North America Act).

Some areas of jurisdiction remain outside of municipal or regional legislative authority: railways, banks, navigation and shipping and aeronautics, to name a few that have significant effect on local government powers.

2.0 THE LEGISLATIVE FRAMEWORK FOR LOCAL GOVERNMENTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Before 1998 the Local Government Act of British Columbia was known as the Municipal Act, and it was almost a sole source for legislative authority for both municipalities and regional districts. In 2004 the Legislature enacted the Community Charter, and removed from the Local Government Act a great many of the powers of municipalities, incorporating them into the Community Charter. The Local Government Act was refocused as the document setting out regional district powers.

Key legislative provisions left behind in the Local Government Act include Part 26, Management of Development, Parts 3 and 4, Elections and Other Voting, and miscellaneous provisions like the municipal tax sale provisions and personal immunity from liability for municipal public officers. Even the incorporation of municipalities has been left in the Local Government Act.

Other statutes besides the Community Charter and the Local Government Act also contain powers that may be exercised by municipalities and regional districts. The City of Vancouver for example derives its authority from the Vancouver Charter. Other statutes include the Environmental Management Act.
3.0 POWERS EXERCISED BY LOCAL GOVERNMENTS

Powers exercised by local government include legislative powers (the power to make valid laws); corporate executive powers (the power to make decisions for the better administration of the local government as a corporation) and quasi-judicial powers (the power to make decisions that affect a small number of persons in circumstances resembling a hearing).

Bylaws are examples of the exercise of legislative power. Validly enacted, a bylaw is a law as much as a statute of the legislature or a Cabinet regulation. A breach of a bylaw is an offence, like the breach of a provincial statute or regulation.

In 2004 municipalities (but not regional districts) were given “natural person powers” enabling them to enter into a broad range of agreements, just like a real individual (or ‘natural’ person).

Quasi-judicial powers are those that are exercised from time to time to take action that usually involves some potentially negative effect on a property owner or business owner: suspending a business licence, placing a notice against the title to property to warn of a building bylaw problem, ordering clean-up of a messy property (failing which the property will be cleaned up by the local government at the owner’s expense). Administrative law imposes particular process obligations on Councils and Boards making those kinds of decisions.

4.0 JURISDICTION

4.1 Scope of Jurisdiction

As noted above the Constitution places local governments under some jurisdictional constraints. A local government cannot, for example, regulate where people may take off and land aircraft. That falls within the subject matter of aeronautics, and the courts have repeatedly confirmed that this area of jurisdiction is reserved exclusively to the Federal government.

Local governments are given their authority to act within the various statutes and regulations that provide their powers. However, while the Province giveth, the Province also taketh away. An example is the power over zoning. While municipalities and regional districts are given broad powers to determine the use of land under section 903 of the Local Government Act, the Agricultural Commission Act cuts down that broad authority when it comes to dealing with farm uses. Those are under the control of the Province through the Agricultural Land Commission, leaving municipalities and regional districts with very limited authority.
In many circumstances a municipal council or regional board is empowered to act, but is required to do so in a certain way: by advertising (as in the sale of property); giving notice (as in the case of a variance permit); or holding a public hearing (as in the case of most rezoning). Failure to follow the rules can have significant consequences, including the undoing of the action.

4.2 Acting Outside the Scope of Jurisdiction

If a local government acts outside its scope of jurisdiction, it is acting unlawfully. A zoning bylaw adopted without publication of a proper notice is invalid. Giving a benefit to a business enterprise outside the scope of a partnering agreement is unlawful. An expenditure not authorized in the financial plan is illegal. Entering into an agreement of more than 5 years in some cases requires elector approval. There are many limits and procedural requirements.

Most senior municipal officials know the limits of what is lawful and unlawful and will work with the elected officials to keep acts within the boundaries. Local governments have much broader authority to act than used to be the case, particularly before Municipal Act reform in the late 1990s and the enactment of the Community Charter in 2004. But there are still important limits.

There can be serious consequences attached to some illegal acts.

The most obvious consequence is that a resolution or bylaw enacted without lawful authority is likely to be found to be void. As if it never existed at all. This can be embarrassing at the least, and potentially expose the municipality or regional district to damages from a party that has suffered a loss.

There can also be personal ramifications for elected officials. If Council members authorize the spending of municipal funds without authority, for example, they can be held personally liable for that expenditure. (Community Charter, s. 191). The only defence is if the elected official relied upon information provided by a municipal officer who was himself or herself guilty of dishonesty, gross negligence or malicious or willful misconduct – conduct that is rare.
5.0 ELECTED AND APPOINTED OFFICIALS

5.1 The Political Role of Elected Officials

The electors choose who will govern them at the local level. Most of the powers contained in the Community Charter and Local Government Act are to be exercised by the elected officials, rather than staff.

Elected officials enact bylaws, and provide overall general policy direction and guidance to the appointed officials.

Specific powers and important responsibilities are given to the Mayor under section 116 of the Community Charter and the Board Chair under section 218 of the Local Government Act which will be discussed below.

5.2 The Administrative Role of Appointed Officials

The role of appointed staff is to implement the regulations and policies of the elected officials; they are the administrative branch of the local government.

Experienced dedicated administrators, financial officers, corporate officers and other managers and employees can be an invaluable resource for the elected officials. They have knowledge, information, skills and a lot of common sense. In many local governments, significant powers and functions have been delegated to the CAO and other appointed officers and officials. They may enter into routine agreements for the better operation of the municipality or regional district, make routine decisions and in some cases even issue development approvals like development permits. This can free up the busy Council or Board to deal with the more sensitive, complex or policy-driven decisions without the clutter of dealing with the day-to-day administration.

Appointed officials can also warn elected officials of issues and concerns that can help prevent problems such as limits on authority, potential conflicts of interest, previous issues and examples of similar situations.

The CAO, Financial Officer and Corporate Officer have duties and responsibilities prescribed in either the legislation or in the Officers and Employees Bylaw. The CAO is the primary link between the elected officials and the local government staff. A relationship of candour and trust between the CAO and the elected officials, and in particular between the CAO and the mayor or board chair can be very helpful in the proper administration of the local government corporation.
5.3 The Mayor and Board Chair

The Mayor is the chief executive officer of the municipality; a role assumed by the chair of the board of a regional district. This function includes providing direction to the corporation at the highest level, and ensuring that the corporation's different components are functioning properly.

Section 116 of the Community Charter prescribes the powers, duties and functions of the mayor as follows:

(a) to provide leadership to council, including recommending bylaws, resolutions and other measures that, in the mayor's opinion, may assist the peace, order and good government of the municipality;

(b) to communicate information to council;

(c) to preside at council meetings when in attendance;

(d) to provide, on behalf of the council, general direction to municipal officers respecting implementation of municipal policies, programs and other directions of the council;

(e) to establish standing committees;

(f) to suspend municipal officers and employees;

(g) to reflect the will of council and to carry out other duties on behalf of the council;

(h) to carry out other duties assigned under the Community Charter or any other Act.

In addition to the responsibilities prescribed in section 116, the mayor also has the same responsibilities as council members under section 115.

The similar (but notably not identically worded) responsibilities of the board chair are set out in section 218 of the Local Government Act.

The board chair's powers, duties and functions are defined in section 218 of the Local Government Act as follows:

(a) to see that the law is carried out for the improvement and good government of the regional district;

(b) to communicate information to the board and to recommend bylaws, resolutions and measures that, in the chair's opinion, may assist the peace, order and good government of the regional district in relation to the powers conferred on the board by an enactment;
(c) to inspect and direct the conduct of officers and employees, to direct the management of regional district business and affairs and, if considered necessary, to suspend an officer or employee;

(d) so far as the chair's power extends, to see that negligence, carelessness and violation of duty by an officer or employee is prosecuted and punished.

5.4 Members of Council

The core responsibilities of members of council are set out in section 115 of the Community Charter.

(a) to consider the well-being and interests of the municipality and its community;

(b) to contribute to the development and evaluation of the policies and programs of the municipality respecting its services and other activities;

(c) to participate in council meetings, committee meetings and meetings of other bodies to which the member is appointed;

(d) to carry out other duties assigned by the council;

(e) to carry out other duties assigned under this or any other Act.

As can be seen the responsibilities of members of council are described as being related to the policies and programs of the municipality.

6.0 MEETINGS

6.1 What Constitutes a Meeting?

What constitutes a meeting is a question that has perplexed local governments (and the courts) since the limitations on holding meetings in camera were introduced into the legislation.

Section 89(1) of the Community Charter provides that a meeting of council must be open to the public except as provided in section 90. Section 90 of the Community Charter then sets out a finite list of circumstances in which a meeting may be closed to the public. This rule also applies to council committees under section 93 of the Community Charter, and the same rules are made applicable to regional districts by s. 793(7) of the Local Government Act.
The case law (largely from Ontario) has held that a gathering of elected officials “for the purpose of discussing and acting upon some matter or matters in which they have a common interest” – the definition of a meeting from Black’s Law Dictionary – constituted a meeting for the purposes of the Ontario municipal legislation. In another case a ‘council retreat’ was found to be in fact a meeting. The court held that the key in determining whether the gathering was a ‘meeting’ was whether the councillors were requested to do so or did in fact attend a gathering at a function at which matters which would ordinarily form the basis of council’s business were dealt with in such a way as to move them materially along the way in the overall spectrum of a council decision.

Any meeting of a ‘critical mass’ of council necessary to advance the decision making process may be characterized as a ‘meeting’ where council members discuss and move forward with discussions of council’s business.

In a contrasting decision, the Ontario Court of Appeal held in a 1985 decision that the requirements that meetings of a Board of Education be open to the public did not preclude informal informational discussions among board members, either alone or with the assistance of their staff. This case allows for some level of informal discussion by some members of an elected body in some circumstances without the gathering reaching the critical mass necessary to constitute a ‘meeting’. It should not be relied upon, however, as overriding the other definitions of what might constitute a meeting of members of an elected body.

The approach that has emerged from the courts can present challenges for elected officials, but an awareness of the rules is important.

6.2 Voting at Regional Board Meetings

The voting rules applicable to Regional Board meetings are set out in section 791 of the Local Government Act.

There are 4 basic rules for voting, although the interpretation of those rules is often far from straightforward:

1. The default rule is one director/one vote. More specifically, votes on:
   - the general business of the board including the procedure bylaw;
   - establishing bylaws;
   - resolutions and bylaws establishing services for which no service establishing bylaw is necessary; (there is a list of these at section 800(2));
• regulatory bylaws in relation to a regulatory service\(^1\);

• resolution to appoint a director to represent the regional district on a service dispute process;

• resolution to dispense with the consent of a director to the adoption of an establishing bylaw or loan authorization bylaw affecting that director's service area;

• resolutions and bylaws under Part 25 (regional growth strategies);

• resolutions and bylaws under Part 26 (management of development) but only where the municipalities have not withdrawn from the service as permitted under the Local Government Act;

among others under section 791(3) are decided on the basis of one director, one vote.

2. Some directors have a vote that counts as more than one in some circumstances based on a weighting determined by the population of the area the director represents (usually a municipality). A weighted vote of the participants is required by section 791(4) of the Local Government Act on all resolutions and every reading and the adoption, amendment or repeal of all bylaws respecting the administration and operation of a service other than the service of general administration. ‘Administration’ and ‘operation’ are broad terms that are not specifically defined in the legislation and potentially cover most aspects of a regional district’s business. The terms would not in ordinary meaning include ‘regulation’ or the exercise of legislative powers, but from the context it is clear that regulatory powers are included in these terms.

Specific examples of decisions that are to be decided on the ‘weighted participants’ vote are:

• bylaws imposing fees and charges in relation to the service;

• preparation of a parcel tax assessment roll bylaw for a service area;

• regulatory bylaws for the service area other than regulatory bylaws in relation to a regulatory service that are governed by the one director/one vote rule\(^1\);

3. A weighted vote of all regional directors is required on all resolutions and bylaws referred to in section 791(7):

\(^1\) There is a somewhat unhelpful definition of a ‘regulatory service’ in the Act that draws distinctions between services like building inspection, noise and nuisance (for which there is no service infrastructure) and those services like water, sewer, fire suppression and parks that do require infrastructure.
• resolutions to authorize the regional district to enter contracts;
• resolutions to authorize acquisition, expropriation or disposal of real property;
• adoption of the financial plan;
• authorizing the regional district to enter into the liabilities including through the adoption loan authorization bylaws;

The premise is that these matters may involve significant liabilities that could have serious effects for the regional district and so ought to be decided by all directors. Of course the language is broad enough to catch contracts having small value and interest to directors not involved in the particular service.

4. If only 1 director is in a position to vote, then under section 791(11) all directors get one vote each, so that no decision is decided by a single vote.

7.0 SPECIFIC DUTIES

7.1 Duty to Respect Confidentiality

Section 117 of the Community Charter imposes a statutory obligation on Council members to preserve Council confidences. This is an important obligation that is sadly sometimes breached by individual elected officials. There is only a limited ability for local government to meet and discuss matters in confidence as set out in section 90 of the Community Charter. Section 787.1 of the Local Government Act makes this section applicable to regional districts.

In R. v. Skakun a municipal councillor admitted to delivering a confidential and privileged workplace harassment report to the CBC. The report had been received by the council member during an in-camera meeting and contained “personal information” as defined in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act (“FIPPA”). The council member was convicted of breaching section 30.4 of FIPPA which prohibits disclosing personal information and was fined $750.00.

Under section 117(2), if the municipality suffers loss or damage because of a wrongful disclosure of in-camera or other confidential information it may recover the amount of that loss from the council member unless the contravention was inadvertent.
7.2 Duty to Identify and Deal With Conflicts of Interest

The Community Charter requires elected officials to declare and deal with conflicts of interest in accordance with a set of prescribed statutory rules. The onus falls on each elected official to identify when a conflict of interest exists and to take the appropriate measures to deal with it.

(a) The Basic Rules

The basic rules relating to conflict of interest are found in sections 100 and 101 of the Community Charter (applicable to regional districts by section 787.1 of the Local Government Act):

100(2) If a council member attending a meeting considers that he or she is not entitled to participate in the discussion of a matter, or to vote on a question in respect of a matter, because the member has

(a) a direct or indirect pecuniary interest in the matter, or

(b) another interest in the matter that constitutes a conflict of interest, the member must declare this and state in general terms the reason why the member considers this to be the case.

101(2) Once the conflict is declared the elected official must:

• leave the meeting;

and must not:

• participate in any discussion of the matter at such a meeting;
• vote on a question in respect of the matter at such a meeting; or
• attempt in any way (before/during/after a meeting) to influence the voting on any question in respect of the matter

The elected official may return to the meeting once the matter that gave rise to the conflict is no longer under discussion.

(b) Identifying a Conflict

The key to identifying a conflict of interest is finding the point at which an interest arises. This is not always obvious.

The interest may or may not involve money. If it does, it is a pecuniary interest. Pecuniary interests most frequently arise in relation to property, business interests, employment relationships, professional/client relationships, and spousal employment interests.
Non-pecuniary interests may arise in relation to family relationships where there is no pecuniary interest involved (children, siblings, parents) and relationships with other organizations like not for profit societies, church congregations or community groups.

The interest may be direct or indirect. It may be the elected official’s own interest personally, or an interest that arises through a corporation.

7.3 Consequences of Breach of the Act

The consequences of non-disclosure of a conflict of interest are different depending on whether the conflict is pecuniary or not.

If a member votes when he or she has a pecuniary conflict of interest, then the consequence is disqualification from office for the remainder of the term, and the invalidation of the elected official’s vote.

In some circumstances where the nature of the decision in which the member participated was ‘quasi-judicial’ the entire decision may be vulnerable to being invalidated, as the law takes a more serious view of a misstep made in that type of context.

Under section 101 of the Community Charter, the elected official will not be disqualified, however, if she or he can persuade a court that the failure to declare the conflict and follow the statutory rules was either inadvertent, or an error of judgment in good faith. For inadvertence, the elected official must be unaware of the facts giving rise to the breach of the act. To be an error of judgment, the elected official must actually be aware of the facts, and make a reasonable error in good faith. Suppression of information, keeping things hidden, not disclosing the full extent of a relationship or a benefit that might accrue from a decision are factors that may prompt a court to decline to find ‘good faith’.

7.4 Types of Prohibited Conflict Activity Other than Participating in Council Decisions

(a) Restrictions on Use of Inside Influence (section 102)

A council member or regional director who has a conflict of interest in a matter must not use their office to attempt to influence a decision, recommendation or other action in relation to the matter within the local government organization.

An elected official who contravenes this section risks disqualification until the next election, unless the contravention was inadvertent or an error of judgment in good faith.
(b) Restrictions on Use of Outside Influence (section 103)

A council member or regional director who has a pecuniary conflict of interest must not use his or her office to attempt to influence a decision, recommendation or other action of a third party outside of the organization in relation to the matter.

An elected official who contravenes this section also risks disqualification until the next election, unless the contravention was inadvertent or an error of judgment in good faith.

7.5 Limitations on Conflicts of Interest (section 104)

The prohibitions contained in sections 100 to 103 do not apply in certain circumstances:

- where the pecuniary interest of the elected official is a pecuniary interest held in common with other electors of the municipality generally (according to the case law this doesn’t mean all other electors of the municipality, but a sizeable class of persons);

- where the interest arises from a local service area, the interest of the elected official is deemed to be the in common with the other electors of the service area;

- where the matter relates to remuneration, expenses or benefits payable to one or more council members in relation to their duties as council members;

- where the interest is so remote or insignificant that it cannot reasonably be regarded as likely to influence the member in relation to the matter. If the happening is dependent on the occurrence of a chain of events, then it is ‘too remote’. If the amount in question is very small, then it may be found to be ‘insignificant’.

- other situations that may be prescribed by regulation.

7.6 Rules Around Gifts (section 105)

There are two rules:

1. Don’t accept gifts or other personal benefits unless they are:

   (a) an incident of the protocol or social obligations that normally accompany the responsibilities of office. Holding public office means invitations to attend functions, events, and performances or to receive tokens of appreciation or esteem. These are ok if their purpose is as a matter of courtesy, ceremony or gathering, such as attending a
Minister’s reception at the UBCM convention. Such gifts and personal benefits are part of the function and are not prohibited. A reasonable person could not conclude that they were intended to influence the decision of an elected official;

(b) the gifts or other personal benefits are authorized by law. The remuneration bylaw may address some matters, for example, that would not be considered to be a ‘gift’ or ‘personal benefit’; or

(c) campaign contributions.

All other offered gifts and proposed personal benefits should be declined or turned over to the municipality itself. If you can’t decline a gift or personal benefit without causing offence, that might be an indication that the gift or benefit is an incident of protocol or social obligation. If there is doubt, consider turning the gift over to the Municipality. If there is a suggestion that the benefit or gift might create an obligation or an expectation of a favour in the exercise of a public power or function, that is an indication that the gift is not permitted.

2. Even if a gift or benefit is permitted it must be reported to the corporate officer under section 106 of the Community Charter if its value exceeds $250 or if the total value of gifts received from one source in one 12-month period exceeds $250.

7.7 Contracts with the Municipality (section 107)

The Community Charter does not prohibit a council member from having a contract with the municipality, but:

(a) The matter of the contract is a matter in which the elected official would have a pecuniary interest. Therefore, the member must follow the conflict of interest rules;

(b) The existence of the contract must be disclosed by being reported at an open council meeting.

There is a further reporting obligation to advise the corporate officer as soon as reasonably practicable. So, typically the council member would advise the corporate officer immediately, and then report the matter to council at the following council meeting.

7.8 Restrictions on Use of Insider Information (Section 108)

A council member or former council member must not use information or a record that:
(a) was obtained in the performance of the member’s office; and

(b) is not available to the general public, for the purpose of gaining or furthering a direct or indirect pecuniary interest of the council member or former council member.

The consequence for contravention of this provision is disqualification unless the contravention was inadvertent or because of an error of judgment in good faith.

7.9 Requirement to Repay Financial Gain

In addition to the disqualification consequences in sections 101 to 108, where a council member or former elected official has, as a result of a contravention of Division 6 of Part 4 of the Community Charter and has realized a financial gain in relation to that contravention, then the municipality itself or an elector may apply to the B.C. Supreme Court for an order that the council member or former council member pay to the municipality an amount equal to all or part of the person’s financial gain as specified by the court.

7.10 Disqualification for Breach of the Act (section 110)

(1) A person elected or appointed to office on a council is disqualified from holding that office if any of the following applies:

(a) the person does not make the required oath or affirmation of office within the time established by section 120 (1) [oath or affirmation of office];

(b) the person is absent from council meetings for a period of 60 consecutive days or 4 consecutive regularly scheduled council meetings, whichever is the longer time period, unless the absence is because of illness or injury or is with the leave of the council;

(c) the person is disqualified under any of the following:

- section 101 [restrictions on participation if in conflict];
- section 102 [restrictions on inside influence];
- section 103 [restrictions on outside influence];
- section 105 [restrictions on accepting gifts];
- section 106 [disclosure of gifts];
- section 107 [disclosure of contracts];
- section 108 [restrictions on use of insider information];
(d) the person is disqualified under section 191 [liabilities for use of money contrary to Act];

(e) the person is disqualified under section 66 (2) [who may hold elected office] of the Local Government Act or section 38 (2) [who may hold elected office] of the Vancouver Charter.

(2) A person disqualified under subsection (1) is disqualified from holding office on a local government, including office on the council of the City of Vancouver, as follows:

8.0 CRIMINAL CODE

There are provisions in the Criminal Code dealing with bribery, corruption and influence trading where public officials are concerned. Penalties for such criminal behaviour can include fines and imprisonment.

9.0 PERSONAL IMMUNITY AND INDEMNIFICATION

9.1 Immunity from Personal Liability

Section 287(2) of the Local Government Act provides personal immunity for a municipal councillor or a regional board director in the performance of his or her duties or the exercise of his or her powers. A limitation on this protection is contained in section 287(3) which provides that section 287(2):

“does not provide a defence if

(a) the municipal public officer has, in relation to the conduct that is the subject matter of the action, been guilty of dishonesty, gross negligence or malicious or wilful misconduct, or
In addition, section 287.2 of the Local Government Act permits a municipal council to indemnify elected officials in certain circumstances set out in that section. Most municipalities will have an indemnification bylaw that sets out the municipality’s policy in connection with indemnification of legal defence costs, judgment awards or penalties.

9.2 Defamation

Section 287(3) excludes libel and slander actions from the defence against personal liability created by section 287(2). Libel and slander are the more specific terms for an area of the law known as “defamation” which is an area of the law that can expose elected officials to controversy, expense and legal liability.

In the recent decision Hunter v. Chandler, (2010), BCSC 729, a councillor was found to have defamed a member of an inter-municipal committee and was ordered to pay $15,000.00 in damages to a regional district recreation commission. The councillor had alleged that the commissioner was in a conflict of interest and that he should have his professional association “check his ethics”. Mr. Hunter was the North Saanich community representative on its recreation commission and had voted to proceed with a recreation development that council had opposed.

The councillor made the first statement regarding the recreation commission member to the chair of the recreation commission and a second statement to a member of the public who had campaigned in support of the expansion of the community centre.

The court found that the statement made to the chair of the recreation commission was protected on the basis of the defence of qualified privilege. Qualified privilege protects the statements of elected officials in certain circumstances where the court is of the view that the person making the statement has a duty to speak and the recipient of the statement has a duty to receive the statement. Statements made in council chambers, where the function of council members is obviously governed by the roles and responsibilities that they have under the Community Charter and Local Government Act are more likely to attract qualified privilege than statements outside of the council chamber. In this case, the court found that the statement made to the chair of the recreation commission, who also held a public office, was protected by the defence of qualified privilege. However, the court found that the defence of qualified privilege did not apply in the case of the statement made to a member of the public. In that case, the statement was held to be defamatory. The court awarded damages of $15,000.00 because the statement was made to only a single person. The court did not award any lower damages because the council member had refused to retract his statements when given an opportunity by the commission member.
While individual members of council or a board (or individual officers and employees of the local government corporation) may sue or be sued in defamation, the courts have held that the local government itself has not right of action in defamation. In Dixon v. Powell River (City), (2009) BCSC 406, the municipality had sent a letter to a citizen complainant threatening to sue in defamation. The court found that the municipality had no right to send such a letter and awarded damages against the municipality for having done so, on the basis that a municipal corporation had no basis for an action in defamation given the importance of the value of freedom of expression protected by section 2(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Actions for defamation should always be approached very carefully, as often the allegation of libel or slander itself is enough to set off a further escalation in the war of words.

10.0 CONCLUSION

Persons elected to local government positions in municipalities and regional districts in British Columbia have the capacity to do a great deal of good for their communities by providing strong, sound, reasoned leadership. The processes and rules contained in the Community Charter and Local Government Act are designed to enhance the democratic process by reducing corruption rising from conflict of interest, to increase transparency and to provide a mechanism for proper decision-making within an orderly environment. It is important that elected officials keep in mind their own personal responsibilities to avoid allowing the exercise of their powers to become tainted by matters of pecuniary self-interest.
Meetings that may or must be closed to the public

A part of a council meeting may be closed to the public if the subject matter being considered relates to or is one or more of the following:

(a) personal information about an identifiable individual who holds or is being considered for a position as an officer, employee or agent of the municipality or another position appointed by the municipality;
(b) personal information about an identifiable individual who is being considered for a municipal award or honour, or who has offered to provide a gift to the municipality on condition of anonymity;
(c) labour relations or other employee relations;
(d) the security of the property of the municipality;
(e) the acquisition, disposition or expropriation of land or improvements, if the council considers that disclosure could reasonably be expected to harm the interests of the municipality;
(f) law enforcement, if the council considers that disclosure could reasonably be expected to harm the conduct of an investigation under or enforcement of an enactment;
(g) litigation or potential litigation affecting the municipality;
(h) an administrative tribunal hearing or potential administrative tribunal hearing affecting the municipality, other than a hearing to be conducted by the council or a delegate of council;
(i) the receipt of advice that is subject to solicitor-client privilege, including communications necessary for that purpose;
(j) information that is prohibited, or information that if it were presented in a document would be prohibited, from disclosure under section 21 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act;
(k) negotiations and related discussions respecting the proposed provision of a municipal service that are at their preliminary stages and that, in the view of the council, could reasonably be expected to harm the interests of the municipality if they were held in public;
(l) discussions with municipal officers and employees respecting municipal objectives, measures and progress reports for the purposes of preparing an annual report under section 98 [annual municipal report];
